MISCELLANEOUS.

INTERESTING SKETCHES.

The Editor of the United States Gazette, in his paper of the 27th ult., publishes a long and very interesting description of the New Alma House in Philadelphia, in which he has given some beautiful sketches of character, in a style of eloquent simplicity:—

"Leaving this portion of the establishment, we were about to pass through a gate to another, when a female, aged and marked by infirmities, threw herself in front of our companion, to arrest his attention.

"Could I get permission to pass yonder gate?" said she, pointing towards the entrance to the south building. What would you do there?

"My old man is lame, and they have brought him here to put him into the hospital. I would see him, and may be I might do a bit for him. I could wait upon him better than the others, at least he would like it better, and it would do me good to see him and serve him."

A proper direction was given to the applicant, and while search was being made for a key to pass to the other part of the building, we turned to look at the poor old woman, who was hobbling off with joy at the almost success which had attended her application.—Neither age, nor disease, nor poverty, not even the disgrace, (why is it a disgrace?) of an alms house, had quenched the woman's affection. Her gray hairs had come in sorrow to the abode of helplessness, and, instead of ease and troops of friends attending on her age, she was condemned to eleemosynary fare; yet was not her attachment weakened. In competency she might have complained, in health she might have reproached; but in poverty, she remembered only the husband of her youth, and even in sickness she would drag herself from her own couch, and the burden of all her petition was, to be permitted to assuage his pain.

The two extremities of the fourth building are occupied by the lunatics, the males on the east, and the females on the west. We entered the lower easterly room, and had scarcely set our foot within the ward, when a man stepped boldly up to us, and demanded to be tried for murder, for any crime, rather than to be cooped up in his own house. "It is all mine," said he—"it is not the poor house?—aye—and am I not poor? Then it is mine." And a gleam of delight shone across the poor lunatic's face, as he concluded his logical deduction. In a longer room we found a very considerable number of these unfortunate beings, some amusing themselves with various games—some shuffling about the floor with their feet mangled, while others set apart in moody silence, as if half conscious of the irregularities of their room mates.

In a cell above, we saw a wretched lunatic gazing with vacant eyes upon the white walls before him, running his hand along the plastering as if to catch some object that appeared to elude his grasp. He followed the phantom eagerly, muttering the while strange broken sentences—

"They escape me—strange that he should walk when I saw him in the coffin—what could he get up for?" and still he clung the phantom with wild extravagant action—at length his face was turned towards us. It was the manly, well-formed visage of one whom we well knew—much drinking had made him mad, and from a place of public trust he had become a tenant of a lunatic cell, in the public alms-house.—Hear, that ye who think that each debauchery of your own is a peculiarity, that your case differs from that of others—leave the beast before you have served your time, as did the King of Babylon. Early death, derangement, or palsied age, follows the inebriating draught—and those who indulge therein, know little of themselves if they hope to avoid one of these consequences. "Is thy servant a dog?" said the favorite of the Syrian king, when the prophet pointed out to him the evils of his course—"Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?" The holy horror at the crime imputed was natural, his pride stricken at such a gross imputation, the honor of a soldier was concerned, to give the lie to such an assertion—yet he cherished his favorite pursuit, and did the evil foretold of him.

In the western wing we found several females who had need of watching, but none that seemed as bad as the males who we had just left—some were employed in mending, some in knitting, one or two were quiet, and another had placed herself behind some boards in the yard, and was enjoying the luxury of a pipe; long may she be blest with an appetite, and the means of gratifying it.

In the second story we were introduced to a lady who was sitting on her bed, rather en dishabille, but not without a due sense of propriety. She received us with dignity, and our companion as one to whom she did respect rather from kindness than station.

She lamented the state of the times and the general prevalence of immorality, and spoke of her own sufferings. She had been handsome—sickness had made havoc with her bloom, but it had not dimmed the brightness of her intelligent eye—nor had hallucination, while it disturbed her thought, marred the propriety of her language.

"Were I proud," said she, "I should regret my inability to invite you to a better room; but what cause have I to complain, when I live by whom I live, who is my support here and my hope for hereafter, had nowhere to lay his head? They have wronged me of all my worldly goods, and all my exalted standing: the whole of those bright manors were mine, and with them the glory of descending from Columbus. There were two of that name—one the discoverer, the other a priest, and I am descended from the latter; he was the owner of all these lands, and I was his heir."

"But," said we, laying our finger upon her arm, as if seeking pardon for the interruption, "but how could the priest have a wife?"

A slight color passed over the pallid cheek of the unfortunate woman, as she perceived the dilemma in which she was placed. "Oh," said she suddenly, "that is easy enough. We are of the Greek church, and hold that 'marriage is honorable in all.' Is it not so?"

"It is certainly in the Scripture," said we, "and therefore it must be so."

"It is now too late—too late for me—sickness has stretched me out on this bed of pain; and if I were not so, what could I do now? Would some good angel whisper into the ear of parents to bring up their children in the fear of the Lord, and in the love of right; to chasten their young minds by gentle discipline, and to repress in them the pride of display. Oh! could parents know the danger of making their children conspicuous—of allowing them to feel themselves, or make themselves foremost. This is the rock upon which female virtue makes shipwreck—that love of distinction—that fond desire for notoriety, the bane of female happiness—that which has peopled the gibbet, and sent its victim to a martyr's stake, which shows itself shamelessly in some, and lurks most dangerously with others beneath the humble mantle of the Nun.—It is often the same feeling dictating the prayer and the dance of the worshipping. Oh could I go forth and tell this to mothers, could I warn them of the dangers to which they expose their daughters, I should do service to my kind; but this narrow cell is now the limit of my wanderings, and I must pray for those whom I cannot exhort. May the deep pangs of mental and physical sufferings, which bow my body and mind in this straitened bed, be to me the means of virtue, and may my sufferings be to you, a lesson that virtue, in its limited sense, is not enough for your daughters. They must have the delicacy of females to shrink from display, and to turn with trembling, from the chance of notoriety."

There was a "method in the madness" of this female, which told her story—we needed no more."

OFFICIAL.—COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

STATE LAW.

AN ACT establishing the Office of Sergeant at Arms, and prescribing the duties thereof. Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the Senate, That there shall be forthwith chosen by the concurrent vote of the two branches of the Legislature, annually thereafter in the month of January, in the same manner, an officer who shall be called Sergeant at Arms, who shall hold his office until another is chosen in his stead, and who shall give bonds to the Treasurer of the Commonwealth in the sum of two thousand dollars for the faithful performance of his duties, and to account for all moneys entrusted to him for the use of the Commonwealth.

Section 2. Be it further enacted, That the said Sergeant at Arms shall, during the sessions, see that the respective Chambers and Lobbies occupied by the Legislature are kept in good order, and that the fires for heating the same, are seasonably kindled, diligently tended, and carefully extinguished, and he shall constantly maintain order among the spectators who may be admitted into the two branches of the Legislature, who shall hold their sittings, and take all proper measures to prevent the interruption or disturbance of either branch, or any of the committees thereof; and for these purposes, he shall immediately after his election, appoint, subject to the approval of the presiding officers, two or more assistants, suitable and proper persons to be Door Keepers to each hall, who shall, during the session, render him all necessary assistance and perform generally all the duties heretofore performed by assistant Doorkeepers; and he shall also appoint, subject to the approval of the presiding officers, two or more assistants, suitable and proper persons to be Door Keepers to each hall, who shall, during the session, render him all necessary assistance and perform generally all the duties heretofore performed by assistant Doorkeepers;
